

ALWAYS TIRED NEVER RESTED

To be tired out from hard work or bodily exercise is natural and rest is the remedy, but there is an exhaustion without physical exertion and a tired, never-rested feeling—a weariness without work that is unnatural and shows some serious disorder is threatening the health. One of the chief causes of that "Always-tired, never-rested condition" is impure blood and bad circulation. Unless the body is nourished with rich, pure blood there is lack of nervous force, the muscles become weak, the digestion impaired, and general disorder occurs throughout the system. Debility, insomnia, nervousness, indigestion, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, strength and energy, and the hundreds of little ailments we often have are due directly to a bad condition of the blood and circulation, and the quickest way to get rid of them is by purifying and building up the blood, and for this purpose no remedy equals S. S. S., which contains the best ingredients for cleansing the blood and toning up the system. It is a vegetable blood purifier and tonic combined, that enriches the blood, and through it the entire system is nourished and refreshing sleep comes to the tired, never-rested, body.

His Last Voyage

(Original.)

"Brace up, little woman. It distresses me to see you crying as if your heart would break. Have I not told you that this is to be my last voyage?"

Mary Perkins had a presentiment that her husband would never complete this last voyage. Nevertheless, after his departure, she busied herself as usual looking forward to her first letter to be sent from the first port he was to touch. This should reach her in about twenty days. She was a favorite in the town where she lived, and her neighbors, knowing of her forebodings, did what they could to encourage her. "How nice it will be, Mrs. Perkins, when John comes home to stay. I wish my old man had the same prospect before him. But I fear he'll be a sailor all his days. God help him!" "Cheer up, Mrs. Perkins. Remember this is your husband's last voyage." In this vein they talked till twenty days had passed. Then, when there was no letter, they said: "Wait. You can't expect him to write the minute he reaches port, and if he does there is no likely to be a ship coming back the same day to bring the letter." One, two, three days passed, and they were obliged to change their inferences. "They say the winds have been dead ahead for ships coming from that quarter. The mail has been delayed."

Months passed. John Perkins' ship, the Albatross, had not reached her first port, nor second, nor her third. The kind hearted people invented all sorts of stories for the captain's wife, but in their hearts they believed his ship had gone to the bottom, and all on board had been lost.

"I knew it," said the agonized woman. "Something within told me that there would be misfortune on this voyage. The ship is gone down. My man will never come to me again." And she wept in the midst of her children, who strove to keep back her tears by winding their arms about her and caressing her. "What a pity," the neighbors all said to each other, "to think that he should have gone down on the last voyage!"

When four months had passed and not a word was reported of the Albatross, Mary Perkins' neighbors ceased to console her. There was no hope, they said, and it would be better for her to give up John Perkins for lost than to be continually looking for him to return who would never return, to be straining her eyes over the water for days, then succumbing to paroxysms of grief, then watching again and breaking down again. If she did not desist her mind would go. And, oh, how her children watched and waited and told their mother that they had dreamed father had come back, and they had a "feeling" that the dream would come true.

At last Mary's friends began to think it would be no gain to her to have her husband return. They feared that the intensity of relief might either kill her or debase a mind so nearly worn out. Had it not been that they felt sure he would never come they would have kept watch for him to prevent her meeting him suddenly unawares. Meanwhile her little ones, wearied of keeping her up with prophecies, mutely saw her slowly fading away.

One morning little Billy, the youngest boy, aged four, threw his arms around his mother and said:

"Oh, mammy, I dreamed last night that the Albatross came sailing into the harbor, and papa stood on the deck giving the orders, and they legged the anchor, and papa came ashore and kissed us all."

Such words had grown to have a contrary effect from encouragement. Indeed, they only induced a greater despondency. Mary embraced the boy in a paroxysm of tears, and his elder sister forbade him to tell his mother his dreams again.

The spring came, the trees put forth their leaves and the children begged their mother to take them to spend the day on their grandfather's farm, a few miles inland. They drove there in a four seated wagon and after visiting with the cows, the horses, the chickens, which all children love, in the evening they started back. It was dusk before they reached the village, and in every house shone a light.

"Oh, mammy," said little Billy, "see, there's a light in our house! Maybe papa has come while we've been away."

Tears came to the mother's eyes, and the eldest girl placed her hand over the boy's mouth.

But who had lighted their lamp? No one had been instructed to do so. Doubtless some neighbor had kindly interfered to prevent their coming to their home to find it dark. When they drove up to the door a figure reached out a pair of strong arms to help them. The light shining through the open door was on his back, and his face was left in shadow. Nevertheless Mary Perkins uttered the cry:

"John!"

Her husband bore her unconscious into the house, clogged by his children clinging to him and endeavoring to climb up to kiss him. He laid his wife tenderly on a couch, and in a moment she had recovered her consciousness.

Cases in which the brain suffers from joy are not of long duration. Mary Perkins soon recovered sufficiently to hear her husband's narrative. It was the oft repeated story of a shipwrecked sailor being picked up at sea and carried to a distant land. The voyage was two months out and two months back, and there was no way of communicating except by ship.

John Perkins remained at home, investing his savings in marine insurance, from which he had benefited in the case of his lost ship, and became a rich man.

GENERAL WOOD'S METEORIC PROMOTION.

In the current Independent Brigadier General Thomas M. Anderson states the opposition to the meteoric promotion of Leonard Wood to be a major general from the military viewpoint, and his article crushes the last breath of decency from the attempt to favor a household pet at the expense of the spirit of the American army. General Anderson was a major general in the volunteers and a civil war veteran. He led the first Manila expedition, and he has a long record of distinguished service with scholarly degrees in civil life galore.

He first established an ethical proposition arithmetically, as he styles his system. General Wood served 12 years as a surgeon and five years in the line. There are 22 generals in the fighting branch. "What," he asks "are the records of the other 21?"

As given in the army register, General Young has served 42 years; Chaffee, 42; MacArthur, 41; Bates, 42; Wade, 42; Sumner, 42; Randall, 42; Kobe, 41; P. D. Lee, 42; Carter, 40; Bliss, 28; Sanger, 42; Moore, 42; Haines, 42; Carr, 41, and Barry, 26. Out of this number of line generals General Woods has been promoted over fifteen.

He enters upon a discussion of officers of higher rank over-leaped, in all 596, of whom 70 are in Wood's own corps. General Wood never even commanded a brigade, was never in a battle, as military theories define the word "battle." Where less than 100 are killed it is a combat, and not a battle. The three battles of the Spanish war were at El Caney, the taking of Manila and the insurgent uprising of February 5, 1899.

General Wood never participated higher than a colonel or a staff officer in the Cuban campaign.

The most momentous financial question with which the House is to deal is the claim for mileage at the start of the second session, members having already drawn the full 40 cents a mile either way for the special session. Speaker Cannon impudently asserts that he will prevent the raid on the treasury, but Mr. Dalzell upholds the draft. The Senate, having its own mileage account, worries over the popular view should the House be deprived of the double levy. This mileage eccentricity is one of the most exhilarating in Congress. The representatives from the far Northwest draw half his salary in amount in lump as mileage, and of course he travels on a pass. Prince Cupid, from Hawaii, draws, if allowed the double amount, a sum fully equal to a year's salary. Of course the Pacific Mail steamers would not charge a prince of the royal Hawaiian blood.

The Next Campaign.

In every campaign, whether it be military or political, there is always some strategic position, on the holding or capture of which the result depends. However much the contending forces may be scattered, or the lines extended, and how very many minor conflicts may take place at unimportant points, the battle ground, be it in one section or another, is of comparatively limited extent and is readily ascertainable. In the Civil War everything toward the end turned on the struggle for possession of the State of Virginia, and when it was determined that it was to be held by the army fighting for the Union throughout the whole sisterhood of states was settled for all time. It is the part of good generalship when a great campaign is in progress to determine whether it is to be offensive or defensive, and to select either the strongest ground to hold or the positions necessary to be carried. It is needless to say that in the next campaign the Democracy must be the assailants. The enemy is strongly entrenched, have abundant sinews of war, and are commanded by able, experienced Generals. They are in possession and it lies with us to drive them out. Where will the real fighting ground be? What is the most vulnerable and important point within our reach—the one which, if we carry it, will give us victory along the whole line? Undoubtedly New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. The South may have preferences, and may chafe if they are not regarded, but its solid vote for Horace Greeley demonstrated that every Southern State will be carried for the party nominee, whomever he may be. New England, except Rhode Island, and Pennsylvania are as surely Republican. The same is true of the Northwest. Indiana and Illinois may be carried by the Democrats, and are worth fighting for, but the important position to gain on which all depends lies in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. That fact once recognized, there should be very little discussion of candidates outside those states. It is admitted that they are debatable ground. Let their leaving Democrats get together and determine whose, in their judgment, will be the strongest name to put before the convention, and then let them unite in presenting it. Let the delegations from the other states go untroubled, and stand ready to enthusiastically ratify the choice of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, be it Cleveland, Gorman, Parker or Gray. It will be the plain duty of the convention, and the recognition of it now will greatly simplify the situation. It

Of Grover Cleveland Gives Judge Parker and Senator Gorman a Better Chance, Say Leaders.

Below are the opinions of members of the Democratic national committee and other leaders on the effect of Mr. Cleveland's elimination from the list of Democratic presidential possibilities.

The national committeemen were requested by telegraph to state to the New York World who, in their opinion, is strengthened by the declination of Mr. Cleveland.

The following statements were telegraphed by the different national committeemen:

Norman E. Mack, Buffalo, N. Y.—Any candidate named by the Empire State delegation should have the support of Mr. Cleveland's friends.

Thomas Gahan, Chicago.—In my opinion it will strengthen Gorman or Parker. They have not to carry those two states—New York and Maryland.

W. H. Dumphy, Waba Waba, Wash.—Judge Parker.

William B. Gourley, Paterson, N. J.—This declination strengthens Judge Parker materially in New Jersey.

The same inquiry as that sent to the national committee was sent by The World to the chairmen of the Democratic state committees of the various states, and the following answers were received:

Edward T. Brown, Atlanta, Ga.—In my opinion Mr. Cleveland's decision strengthens Senator Arthur P. Gorman.

Willard Saulsbury, Wilmington, Del.—I do not think it changes the situation.

Hugh P. Farrelly, Chanute, Kan.—The unalterable decision of Mr. Cleveland not to be a presidential candidate certainly strengthens Mr. Gorman's chances.

Frank Campbell, Bath, N. Y.—The candidate the Democrats should nominate must be able to secure the support of the independent and business men of the country. It looks to me at this time as if Judge Parker was strong with both of these elements.

H. L. Buck, Winona, Minn.—In my opinion Mr. Cleveland's decision does not materially affect any other candidate.

Will A. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo.—Missouri is for Senator Francis Marion Cockrell, of this state, for Democratic nomination, for president in 1904.

Don M. Dickinson, who was postmaster general during Mr. Cleveland's first administration, telegraphed: "It requires but one answer—Senator Gorman of Maryland."

James K. McGuire, former chairman of the executive committee of the New York Democratic state committee, telegraphed The World from Syracuse last night:

"My choice for the presidency is David B. Hill. If he is not a candidate I favor Justice Alton B. Parker."

"I suffered for months from sore throat. Electric Oil cured me in twenty-four hours." M. S. Gist, Hawesville, Ky.

HOAR'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY
Senator's Recollections of Makers of American History.

BLAINE'S REPUTATION EULOGIZED

Venerable Statesman Says the Former Secretary of State Acted in a Great Way Under Great Responsibilities—Severe Strictures on Benjamin F. Butler—The English Mission Twice Offered to the Senator.

Senator George F. Hoar's "Autobiography of Seventy Years," issued by Charles Scribner's Sons, is an interesting contribution to the political history of the country, embracing, as it does, his personal recollection of most of the leading actors in it, says the New York World.

In the chapter on reconstruction Mr. Hoar says:

"It was the desire of many Republican leaders, especially of Mr. Sumner and General Grant, that there should be a provision at the national charge for the education of all the citizens in the southern states, black and white, so far as the states were unable or unwilling to afford it. It was never contemplated by them to give the right to vote to a large number of illiterate citizens without ample provision for their education at the public charge."

Mr. Hoar thus speaks of James G. Blaine:

"James G. Blaine was a man of many faults and many infirmities, but his life is a part of the history of his country. It will be better for his reputation that the chapter of that history which relates to him shall be written by a historian with a full and clear sense of those faults and infirmities, concealing nothing and extenuating nothing. But also let him set naught down in malice. Mr. Blaine was a brilliant and able man, lovable, patriotic, far seeing, kind. He acted in a great way under great responsibilities. He was wise and prudent when wisdom and prudence were demanded."

In a chapter on Benjamin F. Butler Mr. Hoar says:

"His military career was, with the exception I have stated (the war administration of New Orleans), disgraceful to himself and unfortunate to the country. From the beginning of Butler's recruiting for the war wherever he was in command came rumors of jobs, frauds, trading with rebels through the lines and the putting of unfit persons in responsible positions."

Discussing Butler's relations with General Grant, Mr. Hoar says:

"I do not suppose that the secret of the hold which General Butler had upon General Grant will ever be disclosed. Butler boasted in the lobby of the house of representatives that Grant would not dare to refuse any request of his, because he had in his possession affidavits by which he could prove that Grant had been drunk on several different occasions. This statement was repeated to Grant by a member of the house, who told me of the conversation. Grant replied, without manifesting any indignation or belief or disbelief in the story, 'I have refused his requests several times.' My own belief is that at some time during the war or before the war, in times of discouragement, Grant may have been in the habit of drinking freely and may at some time have done so to excess. During the whole time of his presidency I had good opportunity to observe him in personal intercourse. I was familiar with many men who were constantly in his company at all hours of the day and often far into the night. They assured me that there was no foundation for any imputation that he was in the habit of drinking to excess then. If at any time he had formed such a habit he had put it under his feet. For that I think he is entitled to greater honor than if he had never yielded to temptation. My explanation of Butler's influence over Grant is to some extent conjecture, but I believe that Grant thought him a powerful political leader."

In a chapter on "The Senate in 1877" Mr. Hoar says:

"The reform of the civil service has doubtless shorn the office of senator of a good deal of its power."

"I think President McKinley, doubtless with the best and purest intentions, did still more to curtail the dignity and authority of the office." This was by "the appointment of members of the senate to distinguished and lucrative places in the public service, in which they were to receive and obey the command of the executive, and then come back to their seats to carry out as senators a policy which they have adopted at the command of another power, without an opportunity of consultation with their associates or of learning their associates' opinions."

Mr. Hoar discloses the fact that he was twice offered the English mission, once by Secretary Evarts and again by Mr. McKinley. The chapter relating to this also discloses that he suggested to President Hayes the appointment of President Eliot of Harvard as British minister when Mr. Welsh resigned, and Mr. Lowell, then minister to Spain, was reluctant to accept the appointment.

"The Camel of California"

Just as the camel is the ship of the desert, so is the meek and lowly burro a favorite means of transportation among the mountains of Southern California. It is slow but it is sure. It will climb steeper trails than a horse ever dreamed of scaling. Its back is broad—which helps to make riding easy. It is stupid but fairly docile. You need not fear that it will stumble and so you can enjoy the scenery to the utmost.

Going to California via the Rock Island System is very different from traveling thro' the State on the back of a burro. But there is this similarity—both are pleasant.

Literary Notes

BOOKLOVERS' MAGAZINE.

The Booklovers' Magazine (Philadelphia) has just completed the first year of its life. The Booklovers started as a high-class magazine and every number has been an improvement on the preceding one. In the beauty of illustration Booklovers excels, its color pages, which are numerous, being more than attractive each month. The Christmas number contains a strong story, "Dan Black: Editor and Proprietor," but the magazine has too many good things to allow one in a short notice to go into details.

A QUIANT PEOPLE.

The heart of Brittany never changes, but its face is rapidly losing many of its prominent characteristics with the leveling influence of the French republic. It is only far out of the beaten track now, or on special occasions like fetes, that you see universally the costumes and customs of the old Armorican peninsula. Only an hour's journey from Quimper, the modernized chief town of Finistere, and you are among the Bigoudines, a people whose dress suggests the Eskimos and Chinese, whose faces are strongly Mongolian in type, and who in language, customs and beliefs seem to have no relation with the rest of France. More and more the picturesque problem they present is coming to attract attention. Artists, students and tourists alike are fascinated by it.—From Andre Saglio's "The Bigoudines," in the December Century.

ELEPHANTS AND MICE.

An elephant is usually afraid of any small animal to which it is unaccustomed. A dog or cat and sometimes even a mouse, will cause him annoyance, especially if it runs between the animal's legs. The noise of a mouse running through the hay will often cause an elephant to become excited, but I have never known or heard of a mouse getting on an elephant's trunk. The terrors of the mouse to a larger animal is an old story, and many foolish superstitions have arisen from it.—From Nature and Science in December St. Nicholas.

A WELCOME VISITOR.

Many people, on seeing its title, will be apt to regard Sports Afield as merely a "sporting paper." If they pass it by for this reason, they are certainly missing some of the best contemporary reading matter. The December issue is unusually interesting. We have never read a better sketch of life in the open than C. F. Allen's "Colorado Camping Days," which is followed by a truthful account of the wonderful duck shooting to be had along Lake Erie twenty-five years ago. "Under the Live Oaks" describes a winter vacation in the Gulf coast country, with a striking picture of Beauvoir, Jeff Davis's old home. In his article on the great mining stampede to Thunder Mountain, Idaho, H. B. Tedrow paints a lifelike picture of conditions in a new mining camp; while all students of American history should read Mrs. Slaughter's account of the early life of Sitting Bull and the causes leading up to Custer's annihilation of the Little Big Horn. The departments headed Natural History, In the Field, Editorial, Fish and Fishing, and our Friend the Dog abound in high-grade original matter—completing one of the best magazine issues of the year. A LABOR AGITATOR'S STORY.

JOSEPH R. BUCHANAN
Author of "The Story of a Labor Agitator."

Histories of the labor movement have generally been controversial and impersonal. Joseph R. Buchanan, who was in the thick of this movement during the years in which the right of workmen to organize was unrecognized by the public, has written a volume of recollections, and it has been not contain a single formal argument, from beginning to end, but is a straightforward account of stirring personal experiences. The book will be published this season by The Outlook company under the title, "The Story of a Labor Agitator."

DEATH

Of Chas. B. Dickinson Occurred Saturday Evening, After Illness of Ten Days—Funeral Tuesday.

Charles B. Dickinson, one of the best known men in Newark, died at his home, 63 Locust street, about 5:30 o'clock Saturday evening, after an illness of 10 days with pleuro-pneumonia. Some days before he was taken ill Mr. Dickinson had been caught in a rain and became drenched, causing a severe cold, which rapidly developed into fatal pneumonia. Everything possible was done for him, but his system could not rally from the shock of the dread disease.

The deceased was born in Newark 62 years ago and was the son of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Dickinson. His entire life was spent in this city, and for a period of 25 years he had been connected with the H. H. Griggs' store, formerly under the management of M. Q. Baker. Here his face became familiar to everyone in Newark and there was probably no man in Newark who was known, at least, by sight, to a greater number of people. This acquaintance was also extensive throughout the county and everyone who knew him was his friend, as he possessed a most genial personality that gained friends wherever it was met.

Mr. Dickinson leaves two children, Mr. E. R. Dickinson, of Marietta, and Mrs. Carlos B. Allen, of this city. There are also two sisters, Mrs. Walter M. Smith, of Newark; Mrs. John S. Brasse, of Lancaster, and one brother, Wesley Dickinson, of Mill street, Newark. He was a member of Trinity Episcopal church and Bayard Taylor Council, Royal Arcanum.

The funeral will take place from the home at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. Rev. G. W. Van Fossen conducting the services. Interment in Cedar Hill cemetery.

A RELIABLE MEDICINE

A Reporter of The Advocate Interviews Our Local Druggist, Mr. Frank D. Hall.

The Interview of Interest to Every Person in Newark.

So many patent medicines and advertised cures are now offered to the public that our readers should be glad to know the opinion of a man who has spent years in handling them and profit by his advice.

Said Mr. Hall: "After having sold drugs and all kinds and makes of medicines for so many years, naturally we have learned something about them, their value and power to cure.

"There is no one medicine that will cure everything, but this I do know, that if the people of Newark only realized the wonderful curative and strength-creating power of Vinol, I would not have clerks enough in my store to put up the orders for it."

Continued Mr. Hall: "You see Vinol is not a patent medicine, and it actually does contain every one of the fifty odd medicinal curatives taken from fresh cods' livers, with other vitalizing ingredients. It contains no poisonous drugs or nauseating oil, and you know just what you are taking. Vinol has wonderful life-giving properties; it tones up and invigorates every organ of the body to do its work, and we know it will make rich, red blood, build up the depleted system and create strength.

"When I tell you that we have never sold in our store such a valuable remedy as Vinol for the following ailments and that if it fails to accomplish what we say it will, we will refund your money, it will show our faith in its wonderful curative and vitalizing powers.

"It will build up run-down, tired, debilitated people. It will make the weak and sickly strong and well. It will make flesh for thin people. It will increase the appetite. It will cure nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness. It will cure stomach troubles, dyspepsia and indigestion. It will make rich, red blood. It will make weak, pany, ailing children strong and robust. It is the greatest strengthener and body builder in the world for old people. It is a great strengthener for weak women. It is a boon to nursing mothers. It will positively cure chronic coughs and colds. It cures bronchitis. It makes weak lungs strong and is of untold value in consumption and all wasting diseases. For the convalescent it has no equal as a strength maker.

"I cannot make a stronger statement and can only ask such people in Newark to try Vinol on my guarantee."

PAINT USE COSMETICS

This Is the Horse Show's Message to You, Ladies.

A ROSEATE FLUSH NOW THE STYLE

Your interesting pallor no longer in fashion. It is "down and out." Kate Carew Says Fashionable Women of 1903 Have Grown to Look Disipated—Two Ways of Using Cosmetics.

Kate Carew, in the following article in the New York World, discusses the artifices employed by society women to enhance their beauty, as seen at this year's horse show in Madison Square Garden:

Has madam an interesting pallor? Then hasten, O madam, to change it for a roseate flush!

For your interesting pallor is no longer in fashion. It is out of style, it is obsolete; it is "down and out," as the pugilistic gentlemen say. In a word, it is as dead as last year's horse show.

The horse show of 1903 has lighted a flame in the cheeks and the lips of women, and that flame is fashion's latest word to the woman of New York—a flame for each cheek and a brighter flame for the chin.

Not within the memory of this generation—perhaps not since the days of wigs and patches—have women of irreproachable character permitted themselves to dip so deeply, with quite so obvious effect, into the pigments of commerce (I had almost written "quite so unblushingly," but that wouldn't be quite accurate, you know).

Then, it's her for the complexion artist and the "beauty doctor," and the young man of 1903 can sing, "My love is like a red, red rose" more fervently than ever it was sung before, for King Cosmetic has come by his own.

And that's the horse show's message to the sex, mesdames. There are other messages, other clarion blasts for an over-bodiment of person which marks the highest flood in the tide of public ostentation, but the complexions are what strike one first.

To borrow a phrase from the vernacular, they have last year's complexion "faded."

The beauty of the horse show in these social developments is that it presents the evidence for all it is worth. He who runs—that is, he who treads the sluggish whirlpool of the promenade—may read. There they are, the familiar faces in the familiar boxes, and when it is seen that beauty's face has taken on a deeper carmine all around the great glittering ring there's no getting away from the fact that fashion has spoken.

There are two ways of using cosmetics. You stain and polish a piece of mahogany to bring out its interior beauty—that's one way. You paint a fence to disguise the wood—that's the other way. The fashionable woman of former years treated her face as a piece of mahogany. I'm afraid the fashionable woman of 1903 treats hers as a fence.

We really ought to be more respectful to our own faces!

They do these things better in France. Let a Frenchwoman embellish her lips with a touch of carmine, and the effect is gay and sparkling, with no loss to youth and naivete; but after a conscientious tour of inspection round the promenade in Madison Square Garden one is forced to the sorrowful conclusion that Mme. and Mlle. New York when they "make up" their charming lips look—er—well, dissipated.

It's a fact. We have grown to look dissipated, and it's all the fault of old King Cosmetic. It's a great pity, too, for many of the faces under their too-drawn disguise are pretty, and some are dignified and a few almost patrician in a vivacious way, and neatly all are intelligent, and stripped of concealment they would eclipse the faces of women gathered by chance anywhere in the world; but alas, old King Cosmetic has smeared them all with his crimson fingers and leveled them down to a level that lacks the softness and graciousness that one looks for in the caste of Vero de Vere.

By the way of an exception to prove the rule, the pale, indefinite face of Miss Alice Roosevelt shone from a conspicuous box and offered the unadorned work of nature as contrast to the results of a reckless art. Singular among women of society Miss Roosevelt is as innocent of "makeup" as the palm of one's hand. There is something startling in the simplicity of her appearance in such an environment as the horse show. It reminds one of the studied simplicity of her illustrious father's habits and the family affiliations with the Dutch Reformed church. I've been in that little old church in Washington, and I can see the hair of pastor and congregation rising at the apparition of the horse show complexions of 1903.

Miss Roosevelt's indefinite pallor makes her an extreme type of the unadorned, as the form of her features and carriage of her head make her a very distinguished one, and with only the most delicate accentuation of brows and lashes the president's daughter would present an invaluable object lesson on the art of embellishment without exaggeration.

Wreckproof and Fireproof Cars.

The Pennsylvania Railroad company is putting the finishing touches on a passenger car of new design in their Altoona shops, says the Iron Age. The car, frame and floor of the car are of steel. The inside of the car is covered by a thick layer of asbestos. Very little wood is used. It is designed to be wrecked as well as fireproof, and will be tested shortly on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad.

PAROXYSM OF MIRTH CAUSE OF PROMINENT WOMAN'S SUDDEN DEATH

MRS. JOSEPHINE MOSBY.
St. Louis, Nov. 28.—Announced at the theatres of her sister's little children, Mrs. Josephine Mosby, cousin of Rollo Wells, mayor of St. Louis, laughed heartily. An hour later she complained of feeling ill, and next day died. A coroner's inquest disclosed the fact that excessive laughter had ruptured a blood vessel and that heart failure had followed. The direct cause of death was a violent paroxysm of mirth. Mrs. Mosby was well known socially and prominent in the Christian church here.

THE STRANGER AND THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

(Original.)

One evening a man was travelling through the celebrated Black forest in Germany when, his horse falling lame, he was not able to reach the city, a few leagues distant, by nightfall and was obliged to stop at a forester's cabin. The forester and his family were far above such a humble abode. Their furniture had evidently been taken from a more pretentious dwelling and was kept with a neatness unusual among peasants. Besides, there was a piano, of a very old make, something not to be found among simple foresters.

Every attention was shown the stranger, a man with a noble countenance—indeed one of those lofty faces that seem to mark the highest limit of the animal before it passes into the spiritual. After supper he sat before a blazing fire, dreaming, while the oldest daughter, aged seventeen, was clearing the table. Noticing the piano, the stranger got up from his chair and, going to it, began to look over some loose sheets of music.

"Who plays this instrument?" he asked of the girl.

"I play a little," she said.
"Well, since you have finished removing the dishes, let me hear you render one of them. Which is your favorite?"

"Wagner."

"Why do you prefer him?"
"He sets me dreaming."

"Here is one of his pieces." He placed the music in position. "Let me hear you give it."

"Where have you studied?" the man asked.

"I have never studied."

"What! Never studied? Then you must study. Do you know, little girl, that you have rendered that piece with the exact expression its author would have wished? You have great musical talent. You should go to the conservatory of music to study. Now is your time to begin. The autumn term commences in a few days."

"But I have not the means."

"Not the means? So? I never thought of that."

Meanwhile he had taken her place at the piano and begun to play the piece she had rendered. The girl stood spell-bound. She had never heard such music in her life. It seemed to her that she was in fairyland and the fairies were singing to her in musical harmonies that she had never heard before. Enchanted castles rose before her, now resplendent in the morning sun, now mellow in its descending rays, now bathed in softest moonlight. Wizards were exerting their strange influence, making her weep, melting her into varying moods with entrancing sounds. At last the music faded away with a few soft notes, and she was again in her cabin home.

In the morning, when the stranger took his departure, he offered to pay the forester for his lodging, but the man declined to accept payment. "Herr," he said, "I was once in better circumstances. Then I entertained my friends. Now I have no friends. It is only when a gentleman such as you comes to my dwelling that I experience the pleasure of receiving a guest."

The stranger seemed lost in thought for a time, then said:

"At any rate, you must permit me to return your hospitality. Come to the city this day week and bring your daughter. You will find me at No. —strasse. I shall expect you to supper. Will you be there?"

"How can I refuse?"

When the appointed day arrived the forester harnessed the only horse he owned, took his daughter, and together they drove to the city. As they passed through the streets they noticed billboards on which was an announcement of a concert by Herr Wagner. "Oh," cried the girl, "if I could only hear him play!" Arriving at their destination, they were received by their guest of a week before. After supper he presented them with two tickets, which upon examination proved to be for the Wagner concert. "Take them," he said, giving them directions where to go. Then to the girl: "I am pleased to be able to give you an opportunity to hear your favorite. As for myself, I have an engagement for the evening, but I will see you after the concert."

The forester and his daughter went to the concert hall, the latter delighted at the prospect before her. Entering the hall, which was packed to overflowing, they found their seats to be among the best and sat down, waiting for the beginning of the performance. Presently a side door opened, the hum of conversation ceased, and a gentleman of distinguished appearance walked upon the stage.

It was the stranger whom the forester had entertained in his hut.

When the concert was finished the composer beckoned the forester and his daughter to remain in the hall. As soon as he could get away from the many admirers who encircled him he advanced to his guests. At the same time a man came from the entrance and stood waiting to speak.

"How much?" asked the composer.

"Fifteen hundred marks," replied the man.

"It is enough for the present." Then, turning to the girl, he added:

"This concert is for your benefit. Funds are provided for your course in the conservatory."

The girl, overwhelmed, seized his hand and covered it with kisses and tears of delight.

Years afterward a distinguished pianist visited America and reaped a fortune, which she added to one already gathered. She was the forester's daughter. ISABEL HENCKLEY.

THE GRAND PROMOTER

Major Crofoot Has No Ready Cash, but Millions in the Future.

(Copyright, 1903, by C. B. Lewis.)

THE German tailor had made a timid call on Major Crofoot, grand promoter and general schemer, with a little bill for repairs to a suit, and as the major received and glanced at the bill he said:

"My dear Mr. Schwartzhammer, this bill is made out in a business way and footed up correctly. It specifies that I owe you 90 cents for services rendered. I do not dispute it. On the contrary, I admit the indebtedness and will now proceed to discharge it and show my gratitude at the same time. I propose to take you into one of the most gigantic schemes of the age with me and divide the profits."

"I like my 90 cent," replied the tailor as he looked puzzled and perplexed.

"You shall have them, my dear man, and millions more on top of them. Listen to me. I am about to contract for the entire huckleberry crop of next year at 7 cents a quart and raise the price to 20. The estimated crop is 98,072,235 quarts; net profits, $890,000. A clean, tidy business, with no tar or grease to soil your hands and quick returns on capital invested. No politics or religion in it, and the public must have huckleberries no matter what the price. Capital stock limited to $50,000 and all shares non-assessable. Apply at once. All shareholders entitled to huckleberries at contract prices. You shall come in with me, and we will make an even whack of expenses and profits. I shall want $100 from you to help incorporate the concern. Can you pay it today?"

"You—you mean I vbas to gif you one hoonered dollar?" stammered the creditor as his hair fairly stood up.

"Yes; that will do at present, provided you want to make about $250,000 during the next year. Perhaps, however, you don't want to waste your time on such small potatoes. If not let me call your attention to another sure thing strictly original with me. It is to buy 20,000 acres of New Jersey marsh lands and cultivate celery. The title of the organization is to be the Great Unlimited New Jersey Celery Growers' association. Our capital will be limited, but our celery will not."

"You can see for yourself what there is in it. Twenty thousand acres at $2 per acre is $40,000. Each acre will raise $90 worth of celery, making the season's crop turn in $1,250,000. Say it takes the $200,000 to pay for seed and labor and sundries, and yet there is a cool million to divide between us. Don't let this scheme get away from you, my friend. Huckleberries may get sun-burned and the price come down, but celery takes no risks.

"Certificates of shares will be out next week, and you never saw finer printing in colors. If you can bring me in $150 this afternoon as your half of the expenses of incorporation and buying postage stamps I will be ready to select the land and close a deal next week. What do you say?"

"I—I don't understand her," replied the tailor. "You owe me 90 cent, but you don't pay."

"That is a concise statement of the case, my dear Mr. Schwartzhammer—that is, I do not pay ready cash, but in place of it I offer you a fortune in the immediate future. Perhaps you do not care to go into huckleberries or celery? We all have our little idioms, you know. Very well."

"I now call your attention to the Great American Matrimonial and Trust company. A person, either male or female, desiring to enter into the bonds of wedlock calls at the office and leaves name and particulars and pays a fee of from $25 to $250 to be guaranteed. No sparring, no jealousy, no loss of time. Marriages brought about within an hour if so desired. Parties afterward supplied with money for the bridal tour and set up in house-keeping on the installment plan. Dispositions most positively guaranteed. No fear of marrying a drunkard on the one hand or a bleached blond on the other. Mothers-in-law kept at a safe distance or put out of the way entirely. Every marriage warranted for ten years if rules and regulations are lived up to. Are you catching on, my friend?"

"I bring in a bill for 90 cent," replied the tailor, "and you put him down on der desk."

"Just so, but let us continue a little farther and see where our millions are coming from. There are in the United States at this moment 478,245 marriageable girls. Make the average fee $50, and you see what there is in it. A dividend of at least 25 per cent can be declared every year. Keep your eye on this scheme until you can unload mining and railroad stocks and come in out of the wet. Certificates of shares will be put at $5 each, so that all can invest. Divorces procured for grass widows at reasonable figures and without unnecessary delay. How do you like it, my friend?"

"Don't—don't I get my 90 cent?" asked the tailor in a helpless way as he pointed to the bill lying on the desk.

"You do, my dear creditor. You get it a hundred thousand times over. That's what I'm working for. You have had confidence in my financial integrity, and I wish to prove my gratitude. If you don't fancy what I have mentioned why not join me in my little Florida scheme and be able to buy a national bank within two years?"

"Ten thousand acres of swamp lands can be bought in Florida for $1 an acre. Each acre will furnish pasture ground for 12,000 frogs. At one year old each frog will sell right there on the ground for a dime. That is, his hind legs will, while the rest of his body can be fed to 10,000 ducks and geese being raised for market at the same time. No machinery to get out of order about this scheme. Requires no ice in summer and no cold storage in winter. Capital stock only $25,000 and monthly dividends of 50 per cent guaranteed. Bound to go with a jump—bound to. Cannot be consolidated with any gas company nor sold to an English syndicate. Title not yet selected, but will probably be the Great Southern Frog and Fowl Raising company. Trustees holding funds for orphans are asked to look into this scheme for richness. Can you bring me $75 by 4 o'clock this afternoon as your share of the preliminary expenses?"

"By tunder! By tunder!" gasped the tailor as he walked about with the perspiration standing out on his face.

"You are a hard man to suit, but I still have something to offer you," placidly continued the major as he looked for and lighted the stub end of a cigar.

"Do you want to make money enough in a week to buy the earth? All right. Bring me in $200 by tomorrow noon, and I will admit you as an equal partner in my latest and perhaps most profitable scheme. It is to seize Canada some dark night and sell her to the United States. The capital required is only $500,000, and Uncle Sam would jump at an offer to pay $500,000,000 cash on the nail. Clear profit in a week or so, $49,500,000."

Wanted—A first class seizer who is not afraid of work and has had some experience in seizing countries. Apply at the office of the Great American Seizer company. Canada is right over there, waiting to be seized, and Uncle Sam is right over here, waiting to buy. You might run some little risk in frogs, but this thing is spiked down and can't get away."

"My dear Mr. Schwartzhammer, come in with me—come in out of the dampness. There is a chance to shore millions down your hind pocket and no chance to fail. Shakespeare says—"

"I like to know if I get my 90 cent?" interrupted the tailor with many gestures.

"I have still one more scheme"—began the major as he walked around the room, but his creditor cried out:

"I vbas oop here mit a bill, but you don't pay him!"

"As I was saying—"

"Und you cheat me!"

"As I was saying, my friend—"

"Und you vbas some dead beats, und I go und haf three lawsuits on you!"

The tailor flourished his arms and looked his indignation and disgust and stalked out of the room, and the grand promoter looked after him and sighed and shook his head and said to himself:

"I would have made a Rothschild of him within a year, but alas, he is wedded to his goose."

FAMILY POISONED

By Eating Canned Salmon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Krebs Being Desperately Ill--Five Members of the Household Stricken Sunday.

Five persons are lying dangerously ill at the home of Charles Krebs, 208 West Church street, as a result of eating canned salmon, and the result in the case of at least two of those who were poisoned is extremely doubtful, with the chances against their recovery.

The victims of the ptomaine poisoning are: Charles E. Krebs, assistant superintendent of the Jewett car works.

Mrs. Charles E. Krebs. Louis Krebs, a brother of Charles, employed at the car works.

Oscar Fankhouser, brother of Mrs. Krebs, also employed at the car works.

Bessie Dernberger, a domestic in the Krebs home.

Charles E. Krebs came to Newark from Powhattan, a small village near Wheeling, W. Va., about four years ago and has been connected with the Jewett since coming to this city, at present being assistant superintendent.

Louis Krebs has been here several months, and Mr. Fankhouser about a month, while Miss Dernberger is a native of Newark.

At supper on Saturday night the family partook heartily of canned salmon, which had been purchased during the day, and about 10 o'clock Mrs. Krebs was taken ill. While her symptoms were acute, nothing was thought of the salmon until in rapid succession the other members of the family were also stricken.

The illness of each produced the same symptoms, which in all cases became more and more alarming, until about six o'clock Sunday morning, when the situation became desperate, not one of those who were ill being able to render the slightest assistance to any of the others. It was determined to call for assistance, and with great difficulty Mr. Fankhouser managed to make his way across the street to the boarding house of Miss Maggie Stewart. The exertion in connection with the man's terrible illness overcame him and he fell exhausted and fainting on the front porch. With a supreme effort of will and a final summons to the nearly spent physical forces, he managed to raise himself and to the door bell, which he pressed and then fell back unconscious.

In answer to the bell Miss Stewart went to the door and, seeing the situation, alarmed the boarders, who were soon with her working over the unconscious man, who finally revived enough to gasp, "Family poisoned; go over there," and pointed to the Krebs home.

Miss Stewart, ex-Mayor C. C. Forry, Merle Marshall and several others went across the street, helping Mr. Fankhouser, who was immediately put to bed.

A terrible sight met the gaze of the neighbors. Mrs. Krebs lay on a bed suffering intensely and apparently in convulsions. Mr. Charles Krebs was lying like dead, his head and shoulders on the bed and the lower part of his body on the floor. Louis Krebs and Miss Dernberger were also found to be in bad shape and in great agony.

It was immediately recognized that a terrible state of affairs existed and physicians were called, Dr. W. C. Rank being the first to get to the house. He set about relieving the sufferings of the unfortunate family, and by the use of proper antidotes and remedies finally succeeded in allaying the more acute and alarming symptoms.

During Sunday the patients were kept under the influence of opiates and all bade fair to make a rapid and complete recovery.

Those who were watching, however, were doomed to disappointment, as about 11 o'clock Sunday night Charles Krebs and his wife became worse, and although everything possible was done for them, it seemed to be of no use, and early Monday morning their lives were despaired of. The three others remained about the same, and unless some unforeseen complications arise, it is thought they will recover.

Mr. John Zentmeyer, from whom the salmon was purchased, said that it was his best brand and that he had sold thousands of cans and had never heard of any bad effects from them.

The physicians who attended the Krebs family are of opinion that they were victims of ptomaine poisoning, which is a generic term for that class of poison which are cadaveric, or are generated in dead bodies. In bacterial decomposition of animal matters, chemical compounds are formed which are very poisonous. These compounds, when taken into the human body produce the symptoms that were characteristic in the Krebs cases. These symptoms are also present in corrosive poisoning, from muriatic acid, but it is difficult and often impossible to differentiate between these causes of these symptoms.

The condition of all the patients was somewhat improved at 2.45 o'clock Monday afternoon. All of them were able to partake of and retain some nourishment, and it is now thought they will all recover.
